M. to-day, robbed him of a satchel containing $1,881 in cash and checks, raced around the corner pursued by a howling mob, jumped into their highpowered car and got away at full speed while exchanging fusillades of bullets with the policeman who had witnessed the holdup.

It was as daring a two-man job as the era of taxicab highwaymanship has produced. It was planned to a second and executed with a cool precision worthy of the Apache Kid or the California bandits of a half century ago.
